STARTED AT THE BOTTOM

From the ground, literally. From age 12, young King was surrounded by the hip hop scene. He gravitated particularly with the breakdancers.

After school (or even during), King could be found in concrete, inner city alleysways, hip hop break beats blaring, and kids legs spinning.

There's no rush like it.<sup>TM</sup> he says in his book.

GET THERE BE MUSIC

Years later, already a prominent and talent break dancer, "King" found another passion.

"I'd been the breaker, but I realized it was so fun because of the tracks playing in the background. I wanted to be part of that too."

So, at only 18, King's mother, Nadine, bought him his first pair of turntables, and from that moment King stepped out of the breakroom, and started solo.

The background. He was not to be forgotten however. Over time his natural talent for music and turntable scratching gained him much popularity within different hip hop circles.

Not only was he a regular in the hip hop break dance scenes, he also gained popularity as a sought after DJ for rap battles and even landed regular gigs at several clubs across the east coast.
